Parashat Vayeshev - 5766 - "Seasonings of Wisdom" in the Language of the Torah

One of the basic ways in which the Torah can be interpreted is Remez (hints at underlying truths). And one of the paths of Remez is that of Gematria, the search for meaning by evaluating the numerical equivalents of Hebrew words and verses by using the number values of the letters of the Aleph Bet (Aleph = 1, Bet = 2, ...). In Pirkei Avot (3:23), the Mishnah quotes Rabbi Eliezer ben Chisma as follows: "The laws of bird-offerings and the laws of Pischei Niddah are essential laws ... astronomy and gematriaot are like the seasonings of wisdom." The Muslims claim that Yishmael, and not Yitzchak, was the rightful heir of Avraham and that, in line with their assumption, it was Yishmael, not Yitzchak, who was bound on the altar at the time of the Akeidah. The Baal HaTurim brings a gematria which defends, from within the very language of the Chumash, against this Islamic claim. The gematria of Yitzchak is 208. When Avram's name is changed to Avraham, because he will be an "Av Hamon," "Father of Multitudes," that expression is used twice. The gematria of this double expression is also 208! Other gematriaot which serve to strengthen the Avraham - Yitzchak and the Yitzchak - Akeidah connections are as follows: In the expression used by Hashem to Avraham, "U'Melachim mimecha yatzau," "And kings will descend from you," the gematria of "mimecha," "from you," is 100, the age of Avraham at the time of Yitzchak's birth, and the gematria of the phrase "mimecha yatzau," "will come from you," is 207! (In gematria, a discrepancy of 1 is permitted.) At the time of the Akeidah, when the Angel of Hashem prevents Avraham from completing the sacrifice, an "ayil achar," "a different ram" is brought to Avraham's attention. The gematria of "achar," "different," is 209.

In the study of Chumash, one deals with the rich and suggestive language of the text as well as with ideas, and the two interact with each other. An example occurs in our Parashah: Rav Yissachar Yaakovson, in "Bina BaMikra," cites M. D. Kassuto who among others points out the very similar language used in two instances in the Parashah. The first is when Yoseph's brothers bring the "kesonet pasim," the "many-colored coat," the symbol of their rage and frustration, dipped in goat's blood, to their father. They say to him, in perhaps the cruelest expression in all of the Bible, "zot matzanu; haker na, ha'ketonet binecha hi im lo?," "We have found this; identify it, please - is it the coat of your son or not?" And Yaakov is forced to respond, in a grief beyond words, "It is the coat of my son; Yoseph is without doubt torn by a wild beast" (Bereshit 37:32-33). The second is when Tamar, accused of adultery, says at her trial, (Bereshit 38:25-26) "Haker na, lemi ha'chosemet vaha'ptilim ve'ha'mateh ha'aleh?," "Identify these, please, whose are they - this signet, this cord and this staff?" (indicating that it is the owner of those items by whom she is pregnant).

Yehudah was most responsible for the cruel deception upon his father, for it was his suggestion that Yoseph be sold into slavery. He was punished "midah k'neged midah," "measure for measure," when Tamar, having been frustrated in her attempts to become a "mother in Israel," tricked her father-in-law into a quasi-"Yibbum," "levirate marriage." And, at her trial, she sent to Yehudah the objects which accused him - silently, teaching for all generations that it is preferable for a person to enter a fiery furnace, for that was to be her punishment, than to embarrass someone else in public. Yehudah, confronted with this evidence, rises to the challenge, and says "Tzadkah mimeni!" "She is more righteous than I!" On Tisha B'Av and on Yom Kippur we read of the cruel executions of the Ten Martyrs by the Romans, although we know that the executions were not in fact performed simultaneously. The paytan, based on the Midrash, relates the deaths of these great men of Israel to the crime of the brothers of Yoseph, who sold him into slavery for a pair of shoes. The question arises, "Is there any evidence of this in the Chumash itself?"

I would suggest that the parallelism suggests that the courageous "viduy," confession, "Tzadkah mimeni" was in fact a "kaporah," an atonement, for the sin of "mechirat Yoseph," the sale of Yoseph. When we evaluate the gematria of the passuk representing the sin, from "zot matzanu" thru "im lo," we find that the total is 1906. The gematria of Tamar's statement which triggered the kaporah, from "haker na" thru "ha'aleh" is 1896. The discrepancy between the sin and the kaporah is precisely ten, and it was to complete the kaporah, that the deaths of the Ten Martyrs were called for by the "Midat HaDin," the Attribute of Strict Justice."
