Parashat Shelach – 5766 – “They were all great men” (BaMidbar 13:3)

I once saw a Midrash which said that the problem with the “Meraglim” was that they were all men. If Moshe Rabbeinu, A”H, had sent women, such as the “Bnos Tzelaphchad,” about whom we will read in Parashat Pinchas, who had a desire to have a portion on “Eretz Yisrael,” the results might have been very different.

Last Sunday, 22 Sivan, Congregation Bais Torah and Yeshivas Shaarei Torah co-sponsored an “Azkarah” for Rebbitzin Yocheved “Jackie” Wein, A”H. There were three speakers, preceded by Dr. Donny Zwickler, who recited “Shir HaMaalos MiMaAmakim,” introduced by Dr. Moshe Kranzler, a close friend for many years of the Wein Family, followed by Rav Berel Wein, Shlit”a. They were Rav Chaim Wein, a Rosh Yeshiva at Shaarei Torah, and the son of Jackie and Rav Berel, Rav Walmark, current Rosh HaYeshiva, and Rav Yisrael Gottlieb, Mora D’Asra of Bais Torah. Rav Chaim described the beautiful “ruach” that his mother created for her family each Shabbos. Preparation for Shabbos was never a burden for her, but a delight. She captured the spirit of “For all who sanctify the Shabbos in the manner befitting it, HaShem takes care of their material needs.” She epitomized the spirit of granting Honor to Shabbos, as the multitude of guests they had in their house would testify, as “Zemiros” and “Divrei Torah” would define their “Seudos Shabbos.”

Rav Walmark spoke of the remarkable “Menuchas Nefesh,” Serenity of Spirit, displayed by the Rebbitzin. He was amazed at how well she complemented the Rav. He urged Rabbi Wein to continue in his “Avodas HaKodesh,” his Holy Work, as would have been the wish of his late and beloved wife.

Rav Gottlieb invoked the Midrash of “Yocheved was born between the walls,” and applied it to Rebbitzin Wein. The deeper meaning of that statement is that she was born into a world that was fast disappearing, but she succeeded in transmitting the Torah ideals she had imbibed in her youth into the modern world. He announced that the shul would be commissioning the writing of a Sefer Torah in honor of their beloved Rebbitzin.

Then Rabbi Berel Wein rose to pay tribute to his wife of half a century. Continuing the idea of “Yocheved was born between the walls,” he said that Jackie had come to the States at the tender age of four. She grew up in a house of tremendous serenity, in which her father, Rabbi Levine, created an “absolute feeling of having God’s Presence in the home.” He described the characteristic of loyalty to him always shown by Jackie; “...So says HaShem, ‘I remember the kindness of your youth, the love of your engagement time, your following Me into the Wilderness, into a land where nothing grew.’” (Yirmiyahu 2:2)

The Rav recalled that Jackie’s dream had been to marry someone from Detroit, but they had instead immediately moved to Chicago, where Rabbi Wein had been a lawyer. But then the L-rd said, “Maybe you’d like to be a rabbi in a storefront in Miami Beach.” The results of the “prube” were that he was elected by the overwhelming majority of 21-19. After which he said, “We’re going to move to Miami Beach, and never again go into business! The Family Business will be Torah!” Rebbitzin Wein helped build the small community into a large, successful one. She taught the girls of the community “Home Economics,” which meant “how to make apple sauce.” But it wasn’t only apple sauce; it was how to make a kosher kitchen, a lesson those girls learned for life. Afterwards, he became Head of the Kashrus Division of the OU, a Rav and Rosh HaYeshiva in Monsey, with Jackie always playing a strong supporting role.

Finally came Aliyah to Yerushalayim, which had always been a dream of his. But “Eretz Yisrael” didn’t waste much time in telling him, “Who needs you?” After all, there was no shortage of Torah or teachers of Torah there. But gradually, he began to teach, and was given the opportunity to speak at the Beit HaNasi Synagogue. He was eventually offered the Rabbanus at that shul, but he felt that at that stage of life, he really didn’t need it. But Jackie said, “You’re a Rabbi, that’s your mission in life, you tell them “Yes!” Which he, of course, did.

Whereupon, she proceeded to organize a community of some 300 families, as had been her role throughout their married life.

Jackie saw great grandchildren, despite the fact that early in their marriage, she had been diagnosed with a very serious illness. But the “One Who heals all flesh and performs wonders” gave her 45 more years. It says in (Bereshis 2:18) “It is not good for Man to be alone.”

And “Shelomoh HaMelech” writes in Mishlei (18:22) “One who finds a wife, finds Goodness.” But he also writes in Koheles (7:26) “I find the woman to be more bitter than death.” The way to reconcile these verses, explained Rabbi Wein, is that if a person feels that HaShem helped him find a wife, and for him it was only a matter of serendipity, the marriage will indeed be good and wonderful. But if a person thinks that he himself found his wife, without the help of G-d, then his marriage will indeed be bitter.

Rabbi Wein concluded, “She’s in good shape,” meaning that his beloved Jackie was buried next to her saintly mother, and her “Neshamah” had been the duplicate of the “Neshamah” of her father. People would say, “Never forget how Rabbi Levine made the “Brachah” on the Torah. When he was finished, you knew he believed that the Torah was a “Torah of Truth,” and that HaShem had planted within His People, Israel, Eternal Life, and Rebbitzin Jackie Wein was the same. “She was the Rabbi and the Rosh HaYeshiva!” When her grandson called to report that he’d finished “Shas” a fourth time, Jackie said that what she was most proud of was that he behaved as one who’d finished “Shas” four times. Her fourth grade students, now mothers and grandmothers, would frequently come over to visit on Shabbos. The Rabbi had said, “Don’t you do enough for them during the week?” But she had replied, “I love them.” PF
