Parashas Miketz Yoseph HaTzaddik, "Joseph the Righteous"

At the beginning of this Parashah, we find Yoseph rising to a position of greatness and power in Egypt on the strength of his ability to accurately interpret the dream of the Pharaoh. Yoseph maintains his attitude of modesty when Pharaoh says to him, "...and I have heard that you comprehend a dream to interpret it" (Bereshit 41:15), by saying "...That is beyond me; it is G-d Who will respond and restore Pharaoh's peace of mind." (Bereshit 41:16) Here we see a great talent of Yoseph understood by him and explained to others as a gift of G-d. However, there was a behavior demonstrated by Yoseph in last week's Parashah for which he must accept full credit. I am referring to his response to his attempted seduction by the wife of Potiphar. We found there, "After these things, his master's wife lifted her eyes to contemplate Yoseph, and she said to him, 'Lie with me.' But he adamantly refused... (and the Torah places on the word signifying his refusal a 'shalshelet,' a musical note consisting of two-and-a-half 'pazer's,' denoting intense personal struggle). He said to her, 'My master has trusted me completely... and he has denied me nothing but you, inasmuch as you are his wife; how then can I betray his trust and perpetrate this great evil against G-d?'" (Bereshit 39:7-9) It is for this and this alone that Yoseph is given the title of "Yoseph HaTzaddik," Yoseph the Righteous. In Masechet Sotah 36b, we find that at the height of his passion, "... the image of his father appeared to him in the window..." and he was able to overcome his desire. The appearance of the image of his father was brought about by the deep spiritual bond between them rooted in his sub-conscious and reaching upward to the conscience of Yoseph.

A question has arisen with regard to the righteousness of Yoseph – how could he not have, once he rose to power, contacted his grieving father and communicated to him that he was still alive?

I believe that a possible answer to this may lie in the last set of interactions between Yoseph and his father. At the beginning of Parashat Vayeshev, the Chumash tells us that Yoseph was guilty of slandering Leah's sons, hardly a behavior that would endear him to his father. Worse than that, when Yoseph described his dream of the sun and the moon and the eleven stars bowing to him, Yaakov's reaction is, "...And his father scolded him, and said to him, 'What is this dream that you have dreamt? Are we to come – I and your mother and your brothers – to bow down to you on the ground?' So his brothers were jealous of him, but his father was silent, remembering the dream for the future." (Bereshit 37:10-11) And soon afterwards, his father had sent him on a mission he must have known to be dangerous. "And Yisrael said to Yoseph, 'Your brothers are shepherding the flocks in Shechem, go now, for I will send you to them...'" (Bereshit 37:13) And Yoseph, not wishing to disobey his father, had responded, "...Here I am!" (ibid) He had received a murderous reception from his brothers, and he could not help but implicate his father as well, despite the earlier gift of the many-colored coat! Thus, for all the intervening years, he had resented not only his brothers, but also his father, for exposing him to the cruelty of his brothers.

When, at the moment of truth with Potiphar's wife, his sub-conscious had saved him by projecting an image of his father in the window, doubt had entered his mind concerning his suspicion of his father. When he learned from Pharaoh's dream that there would be seven years of plenty followed by seven years of famine, a means of testing the members of his family began to crystallize in his mind. He planned the complicated series of events that would result in Yaakov's releasing of Binyamin to his brothers, and his simulated imprisonment of Binyamin, to elicit the reaction of the brothers. And when Yehudah stepped forward and said, "...Then your servant my father said to us, 'You know that my wife bore two sons for me. One has left me and I assumed that alas, he has surely been torn to pieces, for I have not seen him since! So should you take this one also from my presence, and disaster befall him, then you will have brought down my white hair in an evil way to the grave!' And now, if I come to your servant, my father, and the youth is not with us, since his soul is bound up with his soul, when he sees that the youth is missing, he will die ... For your servant took responsibility for the youth from my father saying, 'If I do not bring him back to you, then I will have sinned against my father for all time! Now therefore, let your servant remain instead of the youth, as a servant to my lord, and let the youth go up with his brothers...'" (Bereshit 44:27-33) Yoseph had heard convincing testimony that he had misjudged his father, and that his brothers had repented for the sin of selling him into slavery. The Chumash continues with Yoseph's immediate revealing of his identity to his brothers.
