Parashas Beshalach "Shabbos and Tomche Shabbos

After the Splitting of the Sea, we find, "There He established for the nation a decree and an ordinance, and there He tested it." (Shemos 15:25) Rashi quotes the Mechilta and Sanhedrin 56b, as follows, "At Marah He gave them a few sections of the Torah, so that they should learn to deal with them: Shabbos, the Red Heifer and Civil Law." The Law of the Red Heifer is called a decree because it is not understandable to human intelligence, while Shabbos and Civil Law are called ordinances because they show the morality of the Torah and are logical. (Rashi)

The Tomche Shabbos Dinner was held, this year, in honor of Mr. Eli Hirsch. Eli was a great person, who grew up to be a man of means; ready, willing and able to help any and every worthy Jewish individual or institution, but one who fled from honor. As a teenager, he worked in my father, A"H's house ware store in Washington Heights, where in their spare time, my father taught him to drive and how to be a "Shaliach Tzibbur."

Alan Rosenstock, the Director of the organization, spoke from the heart, describing some of the tragic cases of misfortune which Tomche Shabbos is dedicated to help. He introduced an individual whose family is being helped by Tomche Shabbos. In words that drew tears to the eyes of many listeners, he expressed gratitude to the organization. Finally, Dayan Dunner, with great warmth and humor, spoke about the wonderful characteristics of Shabbos, and of Tzedakah.

In one vignette, in a time and place with weather similar to last week's, he described a driver, who had to pull over to the side of the road due to terribly inclement weather. He then noticed a hand sticking up out of a snow bank wearing a red glove, seemingly asking for help. The driver rushed over to the hand and quickly extracted its owner from the snow, thereby saving his life. I don't recall how this great act of Tzedakah was requited. Meanwhile, Yehuda Eliezer, who was sitting next to me at the dinner, recalled a very similar incident from his childhood. On a very snowy morning, in the town of Snowden, near Montreal, he and two of his sisters were trundling along with great difficulty to school while their mother, who taught in another school, was with great effort making her way to that school, wondering why the authorities hadn't closed school that day. Suddenly, she saw a gloved hand sticking up from the snow. She rushed to the aid of the trapped person and managed to extricate him from the snow. Then she ran to the school and banged on the closed glass door, to attract the attention of the superintendent, together with whom she brought the victim into the warmer area indoors, saving his life.

Our "schul" recently lost a wonderful couple, who represented the ideals of Tomche Shabbos, Shelly and Joel Sanders. Shelly was a giving person, who did favors for her friends, of whom there were many. Everybody liked her. One reason was that she spoke no "lashon hara." She used her talents to the maximum – especially in her chosen field, proofreading. She could take a document, and polish it till it shone like a diamond. Analogous to how she lived her life. Her "Yedid-Nefesh" was Joel.

Joel Sanders was a wonderful human being. Our friendship began one summer in Camp Agudah, when we were teenagers, in the same bunk. We played on the same teams, getting to know each other. The relationship blossomed when we met again in Monsey as young adults, in Congregation Bais Torah, under the leadership of the Founding Rabbi, Rabbi Berel Wein. In fact, Joel got along famously with all the rabbis of our "schul." I could tell immediately that Joel had a "lev tov," a good heart. He was generous to a fault. Like Tomche Shabbos, he had a unique ability to recognize people in need. By this time in his life, he had the ability to help them; always giving, large or small, and always "matan be-saser." Where did he learn those ethics? Mainly at home, from his father and mother, and from his interactions with his siblings. A native of the Bronx, he was a "chosid" of Rabbi Bik, and other Torah luminaries who lived there at that time. And when his family moved to Washington Heights, he continued to learn, from the rabbis in the neighborhood and from his friends. He was dedicated to the learning of Torah, having learned that "midah" at home from his father and brother, from the communities in which he lived, from his rabbis and teachers, from his friends and associates. He helped give meaning to the name of our "schul." Congregation Bais Torah.

L'Iluy Nishmas beni, Aharon Baruch Mordechai, ben Pinchas Menachem
