Tracking the Spiritual Growth of the Jewish People

The Jewish People come upon the scene in Sefer Bereshis with the arrival of The Avos and Imahos. They are human beings, with great spiritual insight. Avraham, the fountain of faith, and Sarah are blessed with the arrival of Yitzchok, the symbol of spiritual laughter and, together with Hagar, Avraham fathers Yishmael, a symbol of wildness. Yitzchok, together with Rivkah, fathers Yaakov and Esav. Yaakov preserves the nucleus of spirituality, and love of Torah, though it hasn't yet been given, while Esav is a hunter, possessing some spiritual qualities, but basically an enemy of Yaakov. Yaakov, together with Rochel, her sister Leah, and their handmaidens, Zilpah and Bilhah, produce the Twelve Tribes of Israel. Included in those tribes are Yehudah and Yoseph, sparks of Messianism.

Yoseph also ignites jealousy among the brothers, who commit the great sin of selling him into slavery. HaShem's hand is evident behind Yoseph's rise to power in Egypt, and the descent of the People of Israel into their first Exile, in the land of Egypt. Ramban considers the Avos Chariots of God.

In Sefer Shemos, the Tribes of Israel are subjected to brutal slavery in Egypt. Moshe and Aharon rise as their leaders and are sent to Pharaoh to demand their release. But he resists until the plague of the "Killing of the First Born," which forces Pharaoh to yield. The Jews cross the Red Sea by a miracle of God, and enter the Wilderness, en route to Mt. Sinai to accept the Torah. They have achieved physical freedom and are en route to achieving spiritual freedom by accepting the Ten Commandments of God, the Author of Morality. Moshe ascends the mountain for a 40-day summit meeting with God, but meanwhile, the people become confused as to the date of his return, and demand that Aharon build a Golden Calf, a reminder of the main idol of Egypt, as a physical representation of God, which he tragically does.

HaShem commands Moshe to descend and attend to his sinful people. Moshe shatters the first "luchos" and acts to mediate the anger of God, Who threatens to destroy the Jewish People and begin again with Moshe. He refuses the honor and prays for HaShem to forgive the people. HaShem relents and provides a second set of "luchos" and permits the building of a "Mishkan" which will serve as His Residence on Earth.

Thus, Sefer Shemos provides a backdrop for the Jewish People's descent into slavery, their redemption from it by HaShem, under the leadership of Moshe; their march towards spiritual freedom at Sinai, and their tragic fall from greatness. Their rebuilding of themselves through the construction of a "Mishkan," where they rise again to the level of the "Avos."

In the Book of VaYikra, we see Moshe Rabbeinu teach the sacrificial laws to the Jewish People. Aharon and his sons replace Moshe as the priestly people. Laws of sexual morality and of ritual purity and impurity are taught to the people. The people accept the combined leadership with Moshe of Aharon and his sons, specifically for their spiritual life. They accept many new laws which they heard first at Sinai, which raises them to the level of an "am segulah," a treasured people. The last verse in Sefer VaYikra is, "These are the commands which HaShem commanded through Moshe to the Children of Israel at Har Sinai (Vayikra 27:24) The "Daas Zekanim" interprets this as meaning that at this point in their history, "The teacher was worthy of the people, and the people were worthy of the teacher." They seem to be ready for entry into the land promised by HaShem to the "Avos," the Land of Israel.
